Committee Appointed To Make Recommendations Regarding Salary Increases of County Officials

Highway Appropriation of $22,200 is Voted By Board —Flood Damage in County is Estimated at $8,320, 820 by County Attorney James S. Drake, Jr.— Aims of Flood Council Outlined — Congressman Cole Asked to Support Flood Control Legislation.

A special committee, consisting of George DeGroat of Hornell, John McIntyre of Wayne and Charles Sager of Wheeler, was appointed at Monday's meeting of the Steuben County Board of Supervisors in Bath to make recommendations at the May meeting of the Board regarding possible salary changes for certain officials of the county. The committee was appointed by the chairman of the board, Forrest J. Loper of Jasper.

Officials whose salaries are said to be under consideration for possible revision include County Judge Erwin S. Brown, the county treasurer, sheriff and various department employees. Judge Brown, it is reported, formerly received a salary of $750 for Children's Court work and his expenses were paid. He recently petitioned for an increase to $2750 in salary out of which he would pay his own expenses. At the December meeting of the board this request was rejected, but his salary was established at $1750 out of which he was to personally defray his own expenses. The $1750 figure, it is said, was intended to include the former salary of $750 plus an allowance of $1,000 for expenses. At Monday's meeting it was represented as Judge Brown's contention that $1,000 was insufficient for expenses and that $1,800 would be nearer the amount necessary to cover his expenses for the year.

Employment of stenographers in the office of the County Childrens' Agent at an annual salary of $780 was authorized at the meeting Monday. An appropiation of $300 was also authorized to pay the county's share of the expenses for flood control as held at Binghamton recently. The appropiation also provides for expenses of the Steuben County delegate in attendance at the council.

The supervisors voted to continue the county TERA department until April 15 in order to qualify for reimbursement of money paid out by the county for TERA projects. Continuance of this agency will involve continued employment of five people at the office in Bath.

Approximately four thousand dollars remains from the dog tax of last year, it is said, after payment of damages for the past twelve months had been made. The sum remaining will be apportioned among the towns of the county.

A total of $22,200 in highway appropiations was voted by the Board. W. G. Kellogg, county superintendent of highways, reported that the available appropiation of $15,000 for snow removal is nearly exhausted, He requested an additional appropriation of $20,000 for snow removal, this sum being authorized. A balance of $3,513.39 remaining after the completion of certain projects, Mr. Kellogg asked and was granted an appropriation of $2,200 for the completion of certain unfinished work. The sum of $10,000 from the county road fund for costs and expenses of road engineering. It was stated that this transfer is the

Seeks District Attorneyship

Prominent Trial Lawyer in Field For District Attorneyship

Attorney George A. King's announcement that he is a candidate for district attorney of Steuben County, subject to Republican Primaries, may indicate that this picture, taken in the Court House at Bath, reveals a political conference instead of a discussion of cases listed for trial. At any rate it is an excellent likeness of three widely known attorneys, from left to right being Attorney Leland B. Bryan, Attorney King and Surrogate Judge George W. Pratt, all of Corning.

Attorney King, described as the "most widely known trial lawyer in Western New York", was born in Dansville in 1890. He was graduated from the Dansville High School, taught school for two years, was graduated from the University of Buffalo with the degree of LL. B., and served as a second lieutenant in the aviation corps during the World War, entering upon the practice of law at the close of the conflict. He is unmarried.

Attorney King is a member of the State and County Bar Association, the Elks, the Moose, and past president of the Corning Exchange Club. He is recognized as a highly successful lawyer, substantial friend and civic supporter. If nominated and selected he will succeed M. H. Cahill who was appointed to fill the unexpired term of District Attorney Pratt when he assumed the office of surrogate judge.

Bainbridge Colby's Punishment

Truth will out! And the truth is, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt issued the order forbidding the navy band to fulfill its engagement to play at a women's patriotic meeting in Washington recently.

Of course, the fact the navy band did not play at this meeting, does in itself make little difference to the rank and file of Americans. What does make a difference to fairminded Americans, is the fact that a spirit of fairplay seems sadly lacking in the crowd holding the reins of authority in Washington. The official attitude seems to be "everything for the 'ins' and let the 'outs' beware if they criticize us."

The navy band incident grew out of a meeting where an illustrious Democrat, Bainbridge Colby, spoke on the subject of "The Constitution". Mr. Colby is a lifelong Democrat known to have been big enough, and loyal enough to his country, and the party under which he voted, to become Secretary of State under President Woodrow Wilson. But Bainbridge Colby is a "Constitutional Democrat" and believes duty stands above political vanity, that welfare of the country rises above the solidarity of his party; he is not afraid to let patriotism for his country rise above loyalty [illegible] the Democratic Party. He implies that the course set by the administration imperils the American Constitution and endangers the fundamental liberties of our people.

In his speech on the evening referred to Mr. Colby lashed out at the Administration leaders in strong denunciatory language, declaring they were not willing to put up to the people any proposed changes to the Constitution, according to the just way the "Founders" provided, but wanted to change it by subtlety and subterfuge, robbing the people of the balancing protection of their rights by curtailing the authority of the Supreme Court. Because, he stated, the Administration is not willing to submit the question of change to "the people", to whom is specifically given the power to change, Mr. Colby bluntly called our Administration leaders, "Nullificationists".

So it was, Secretary Roosevelt, sought to show his authority by refusing to let the navy band play on the same platform where had resounded the stinging phrases in which one great Democrat accused the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, of attempting to "nullify the Constitution."

Had these words charging "nulification", come from a Republican, then administration leaders could have fallen back on the stock phrase of "partisanship". Had they come from Al Smith, the former Governor would have easily been accused of "sourness" because of his defeat by Mr. Roosevelt for the nomination in 1932. Coming from Bainbridge Colby, a Democrat of great repute, they came from a man unquestionably saying what he believed in his heart. Whatever history may or may not prove of the correctness of his premise, Mr. Colby cannot be charged by those whom he condemns as "nullificationists" with trying to pull anyone's chestnuts out of the fire.

Because they could not strike back at their venerable fellow-partyman, with any trite excuses the New Dealers sought to discredit him and the organization before whom he spoke, by the humiliation of withdrawing the navy band.

The trouble doubtless was, Bainbridge Colby had stepped on a New Deal foot where the "shoe pinched". After a President had sent a personal message asking Congress to pass legislation despite the legislators' doubt of its "constitutionality reasonable" though it might be, he has small grounds left on which to deny Mr. Colby's charge of "nullificationist".

Mr. Colby's punishment received more publicity than his speech, a fact administration figures are by now, doubtless regretting.

A well-known educator says education to help adults to enrich their leisure time is an important problem that affects both the present and future welfare of the state.

Government Without Red Ink

In a recent address, Governor Frank D. Fitzgerald of Michigan told about "Government Without Red Ink" — using his own state as an example of how that happy condition of affairs can be reached. And in his talk, he made some points that, simple and even obvious as they are, seem to have been forgotten by a good many high officials.

"I have not come here" the governor said, "posing as the originator of some magic formula that will cure the country of its ailments, economic and otherwise. There is nothing of the miraculous in what we have done in Michigan. We are as plain as an old boot. We've just gone on . . . following certain rules of simple arithmetic and fundamental economics—rules that you and I learned in our grammar school days; rules so plain it would seem almost ridiculous that an occasion would arise for anyone to get up in public and expound them.

"By keeping the operating expenses of the state government within its income, by refusing to create new taxes or additional debts, by actually cutting down taxes in some instances, by trying to find new ways to save money instead of spending, we've managed to balance our budget.

"We've thrown away the red ink bottle . . . forever, I hope."

Just simple horse-sense? Certainly! But in these days of soaring taxes and public debts, and of prodigal waste of the taxpayer's hard-earned dollars, it would be a great thing if more of the men entrusted with governmental affairs sought "to find new ways to save money instead of spending it."

Michigan, like Kansas, is fortunate in having officials who realize that every bill contracted must eventually be paid, and that the money with which to pay must be taken from the pockets of the people. It's time for New York and the Federal government to follow suit.

The Utility Mess

"The present relations between the government and the utilities are little short of being a disgrace to the country", wrote Walter Lippman recently, in a syndicated article entitled "The Utility Mess".

Continuing, Mr. Lippman pointed out that the utilities have made "a truly sensational development of the industry as a supplier of electricity at diminishing cost and increasing efficiency". Yet, he then said, we have formulated a "utility policy" which lumps the good utilities with the bad—which seeks to penalize and destroy the best-managed companies because of the shortcomings of a few. Little or no effort was made by public officials to formulate a policy which would correct abuses, fairly regulate the industry in the interest of consumer and investor, and permit it to develop normally. The new utility policy said, in effect, Utility A must be eliminated. Therefore let us destroy Utilities B, C, D, E and so on, in order to get rid of A.

"A statesman-like and workable utility policy", to quote Mr. Lippman again, "would have been based on the principle of an alliance with the enlightened members of the industry against the unenlightened members". It will be remembered that responsible utility executives have been among the first in pointing to the need for regulation to restrain the wildcatters within their industry. And if federal officials showed a willingness to proceed along reasonable lines, these executives would work with them to the ultimate of their energies and abilities.

Mr. Lippman, who writes for this paper, is known as a liberal. He is without political connections. He is not a "tool of the power-trust", that stock phrase applied to those commentators who have the courage to suggest political fairness toward the great utility industry. He is simply one more of the well-known men, in all fields, who are sickened and disgusted by political hypocrisy as expressed in utility legislation.

A Significant History

By WALTER LIPPMANN

THE history of agricultural policy under the New Deal illustrates in specific form many important matters which are now being dealt with largely in general partisan language. In at least two vital respects, to be sure, the demonstration is exceptionally favorable to the New Deal. For from the beginning the experiment has been administered by seasoned officials through a government department of established technical competence. Most, though not all, of the big experiments have been in the hands of improvisers. From the beginning, also, the legislation and the Administration have been carried out in a spirit of friendly co-operation with the farm leaders, whereas most of the other experiments have been conducted in an atmosphere of suspicion against bankers and business men.

Yet under these favorable conditions the agricultural policy illustrates clearly the fundamental problem of the New Deal.

It begins with the desperate crisis of 1933. It was then universally admitted, though many have now forgotten it, that strong emergency measures were called for. The plain fact, however, was that in the spring of 1933 [illegible] did not know, and [illegible], and knew that it [illegible] time to make up its mind, how to give immediate relief to all the many different groups of distressed farmers. So it enacted a law which gave the Administration blanket powers. Admittedly, this was an extreme example of the delegation of powers, one that only a most desperate emergency could justify. But at that time the country had reason to think that the emergency was desperate, and it approved the bill on the President's assurance that he would be the first to acknowledge error.

The measures adopted under the act consisted on the one hand of a change in the value of the dollar and a resort to monetary deflation, on the other, of restricting the production of crops that had unsalable surpluses. The combined result has been temporarily good in that certain farm prices rose. What part of the good result is due to the gold revaluation and what to crop restriction has never been finally agreed upon.

The A. A. A. nevertheless received the credit for the whole result. But those who knew it best liked it least. For they realized that in the long run it was a very dangerous engine. Committing the government to the principle of a definite price for a few crops, it established pressure groups of farmers who were bound to be tempted to raise the price. Congress would not have been able to resist the demand to increase "the parity price" and in the case of tobacco it had, I believe, already yielded. Moreover, a system which put several million farmers under definite contract with officials in Washington and called for a constant stream of personal checks from Washington was on the face of it a political monstrosity in a federal government. Then, too, for the long run the whole emphasis of the A. A. A. was wrong in that it was concerned with the prices of a few crops rather than with the protection of agriculture as a whole.

To his great credit, Secretary Wallace was among the first to recognize the grave weaknesses of the policy he was so successfully administering. He was among the first to realize that its apparent and temporary success was in fact its greatest evil. For success tended to consolidate the A. A. A. in the form of vested interests. He had begun to lay his plans for a change of policy. But that change was bound to be slow, perhaps to be impossible, because the A. A. A. with its checks was politically difficult to disestablish.

At this point the Supreme Court intervened and did what no politician would have dared to do. It simply stopped the whole thing. The public reaction was highly significant and it throws great light upon the realities which underly the current political debate.

The naive New Dealers jumped to the conclusion that human progress had been stopped. [illegible] minds the improvisations of 1933 were the only conceivable ways of dealing effectively with the farm problem. The naive anti-New Dealers jumped to the conclusion that the court had put an end to all the nonsense and that the farm problem, which has dominated American politics since the election of Thomas Jefferson, the problem of keeping industry and agriculture in balance with each other, could now be dropped like a hot potato. The one side damned the court on the ground that it had prohibited what it had not in fact prohibited, and the other praised it for being just about twice as conservative as in fact it was.

Between them they stirred up an angry debate over an issue that did not exist. For when men interested in agriculture rather than in political slogans sat down to examine the situation soberly, they discovered that the plain words of the decision left, not only left but strongly confirmed, the national power to do the very things which in the long view were the very things that they believed it was necessary to do. The court had indeed stopped the A. A. A. But they knew it ought to be stopped, and they were politically unable to stop it. The court had compelled them to seek a solution which decentralizes the administration of the policy. They knew that it ought to be decentralized. The court had stopped them from handing out public money to particular groups of farmers producing particular crops. They knew that this was an evil leading to corruption. The court had stopped Congress from regulating the price of a few crops that represented organized groups of voters. They knew that the fixing of a few prices is in the long run no solution of the farm problem.

On the other hand, by freeing them of the incubus of the A. A. A., by confirming the spending power, the court had opened the way to a permanent farm policy, and had opened the minds of Congress and the country to the need of it.

The new policy, which has for some time represented the views of the ablest men in the Department of Agriculture, turned out to be in its essential principles the present policy of ex-President Hoover and of Governor Landon. It is a curious paradox. While the Liberty Leaguers and the New Dealers are declaiming over the radio how irreconcilably they are opposed to one another on this vital question, in some ways the greatest of all national questions, responsible public men in both parties are in fundamental agreement.

The fact of the matter is that here as elsewhere fictitious issues have been created owing to the President's notion that it is nobler and is better politics not to "retreat." It is a curious illusion. Nothing would have been more convincing to the people and more devastating to his critics than a frank admission at the opening of this Congress that the emergency of 1933 had passed, that he proposed now to dismantle as rapidly as possible agencies that belonged purely to the emergency, and that, on the basis of the experience gained, Congress should undertake to preserve by making it workable and in conformity with the Constitution whatever was permanently worth preserving. This is precisely what the President is in fact doing in the new farm bill. But he is doing it not as the leader of his people but because he is driven to it by the Supreme Court.

By letting himself be driven under the lash of adverse judicial opinions along a path that he might wisely have taken on his own initiative, he has provided the material for the charge that he has tried to subvert the Constitution. But worse than that he has, it seems to me, miseducated his own following by teaching them to believe that the liberal cause can only be advanced by abandoning the essential principles of political liberalism. As a result, the ordinary innocent New Dealer today is a man who has forgotten everything that mankind has learned about the supreme danger of a monopoly of power in a central government. He has so completely forgotten it that any one who dares to denounce centralization he regards as callous to the sufferings of the poor, and any one concerned in this age of despots to preserve the liberties it required centuries of struggle to establish he dismisses as reactionary.

That miseducation is a disservice to the cause of free, progressive government.

PLAN HOME GARDEN NOW

Mid-winter is none too early to get the garden plans in shape for the next growing season, says Professor C. B. Raymond of the department of vegetable crops at Cornell.

Planning on paper is a big step toward success in any vegetable garden, he points out. This plan should show the direction the rows are to run, the crops that will be grown, the approximate space needed for each crop, the part of the garden where each will be placed, and the distance between rows.

Third Party Move in the So. Called Real Peril to Roosevelt

By MARK SULLIVAN

SEVERAL Washington correspondents judged the insurgent Jeffersonian Democratic meeting at Macon, Ga., to be of sufficient importance to justify them in attending it. Their accounts picture the meeting, and the Southern Democratic dissent generally, as including two extremes. One part—and this was the more conspicuous at the Macon meeting—consists of rabble-rousers of the type of Huey Long, whose principal assistant was a speaker at the Macon meeting.

The other part of the Jeffersonian Democratic movement consists of a considerable portion of the most elevated thought in the South. These are county judges, lawyers in county-seat towns and in cities, many business men and many editors whose private convictions are deeply offended by the New Deal, though their newspapers, for the most part, continue to give at least perfunctory support to the Democratic administration.

Somewhere between these extremes stands the leading figure at the Macon meeting, Governor Eugene Talmadge of Georgia. Governor Talmadge is an effective rabble-rouser—but he also has a sound understanding of the threatening implications of the New Deal. He understands the dangers of the New Deal better than most of the most highly placed economists or students of government. Governor Talmadge's alarm about the New Deal is not mere rabble-rousing; it arises from thoughtful conviction and particularly from his devotion to the continued existence of the states and state governments. Governor Talmadge was the first to see, so far as I observe, that among other underminings of the states, the New Deal is beginning to take from the states so much taxation that in time there will not be enough left to enable the states to function.

Just what do the Macon meeting and the movement back of it mean in terms of the next Presidential election? So far as is now apparent, the Macon meeting, or any similar movement confined to the South, can only express itself effectively in opposition to the renomination of President Roosevelt. And it is doubtful if Southern opposition to Mr. Roosevelt's renomination, standing alone, can have much effect.

The Southern Jeffersonian Democrats can only make themselves effective to the degree that they can elect delegates from the South to the Democratic National Convention. But the machinery for the selection of these delegates, the whole political set-up everywhere throughout the South, is almost wholly in the hands of regular Democrats. It is largely in the hands of men who now represent the South at Washington in the House of Representatives and the Senate. Many of the Southern Representatives and Senators, and many others heading the regular Democratic organization in the South, may be in their hearts as deeply concerned about the New Deal as Governor Talmadge himself. Some of them say so in private conversation and some have said it in guarded public utterances. But at this time it is the intention of the regular Democratic leaders and organizations throughout the South to support renomination of President Roosevelt. They reconcile this course with their private convictions by saying that if Mr. Roosevelt is renominated and re-elected they, and the regular Democrats everywhere, can thereafter take control of the party and make it again Democratic. Their argument is that if Mr. Roosevelt is re-elected he will then be serving his second term, with no possibility of re-election. In this condition, the regular Southern Democratic leaders say, there will be no obligation upon the regular Democrats to pay deference to President Roosevelt or the New Deal. They will be able to repudiate him without being obliged to foresee embarrassment to themselves in the 1940 Presidential campaign.

Assuming that the Jeffersonian Democrats make little headway toward preventing Mr. Roosevelt's renomination, what then will be their course? Conceivably they can start a third party of their own. But a third party confined to the South would have limited effect in the November election. It is just possible that a third-party movement confined to the South might carry one or two states and subtract ten or twenty or thirty electors from Mr. Roosevelt's strength. That number of electors might be material in a close election, for the total number of electors is only 531 and the number required to win is 266.

Quite probably, if a third-party movement should be the ultimate outcome of the Macon meeting, it would merge itself with a third-party movement elsewhere. In the nation as a whole there are clearly the materials for an independent Democratic party. The position taken by ex-Governor Smith of New York makes it likely that he and those who think with him will be obliged to have a third party or else seem pusillanimous. True, ex-Governor Smith and those who think with him, after seeing Mr. Roosevelt renominated by the Democratic National Convention, could follow a course of mere silence and of remaining away from the polls, or of voting the Republican ticket. Among all the possible ways, the more probable course for the Smith type of Democrat would seem to be an independent Democratic party.

In what I have said I may have underestimated the Southern insurgent Democratic movement. Among all the Democrats who deplore the New Deal, perhaps the most earnest are lawyers, other professional men and business men of the South. In that territory is a traditional devotion to the Constitution, to the authority of the Supreme Court, and especially to the principle of "states' rights." So much earnestness on the part of Southern Democrats of this type may make itself dynamic before Election Day.

Republican Legislators Begin Push Against Extension of Gasoline Levies and Diversion to Other Uses

Motor Owners Have Been "Sold Down the River" by Democratic Governors—Relief and Welfare Committee Starts Hearings — Anti-Crime Bills Are Voted Out of Committee—"Hasty Marriage" Bill Introduced by Westchester Assemblywoman.

Albany—The big "push" against the Governor's tax bills begins Tuesday before the Assembly Committee on Taxation and Retrenchment and the Ways and Means Committee, respectively headed by Assemblymen Ralph Gamble of Westchester and Abbot Low Moffat of the 15th A. D., New York County.

General tax bills are scheduled to be today's target for the embattled taxpayers, and this hearing will be in the nature of a preliminary bout for the big show scheduled for tomorrow, when the gasoline tax measure will be considered.

Existing taxes on gasoline, both "emergency" and other wise, have the tendency to make motor vehicle owners and operators see red. Repeatedly denounced as "class legislation"; invariably attacked as "perpetual exploitation of car owners", and consistently used as a never-ending source of revenue by Democratic Governors in this state and elsewhere, gasoline levies have long been regarded as a sort of first aid to unbalanced budgets which, unfortunately, have characterized the State of New York since President Roosevelt's initial term as Governor.

Hearings on extension of existing emergency gasoline taxes, the avowed policy of Governor Lehman, always make for heated exchanges and lengthy oratory directed "at those who originally put over these taxes on the plea that the highway system of the state must be expanded and improved, and then promptly diverted from highway purposes the bulk of the revenue thus obtained."

It is common knowledge that motor vehicle owners in this state feel that for several years now they have been forced by Democratic Governors to impersonate old "Uncle Tom" and have been repeatedly "sold down the river". They will urge at tomorrow's hearing that the time has come for their removal from the unenviable role of "goose that laid the golden egg" and, in this plea, much can be said in their favor. Tomorrow's hearing should be interesting.

Unemployment Hearing

Assemblyman James J. Wadswort, Chairman of the Public Relief and Welfare Committee, has set February 25 as the scheduled date for the hearing on unemployment, its causes, its relief, and its administration. Both he and Assemblyman Herbert Brownell, Jr., are burning much midnight oil in the preparation of this hearing which, Capitol observers say, will be the highlights of the Legislative session. Although Mr. Wadsworth is not a lawyer and therefore, presumably not a skilled cross-examiner, he has on his committee two attorneys, in the persons of both Mr. Brownell and assemblyman Leonard W. Hall of Nassau County, both of whom are noted trial lawyers. In addition, there are on the committee two men who have had vast experience in the administration of work relief, and one woman who is considered an authority on social welfare work in the state. The men are: Assemblyman Denton D. Lake, who served on the original committees of the CWA, the TERA and EWB for Fulton County, and the city of Gloversville, in addition, and Assemblyman Walter H. Wickens, who, for seven years, served as Republican Supervisor from the town of Chile and before that, was Town Clerk for 13 years. The woman welfare expert is Miss Jane Todd, Republican Assemblywoman from Westchester.

Anti-Crime Bills

This week the Legislature will continue its struggle with the anti-crime bills, the Republican Assembly having reported out of the Codes' Committee the majority of the Governor's anti-crime measures, even though, as Assembly Codes' Committee Chairman James R. Robinson (Rep) of Tompkins County said, "Many Republican members of the committee are bitterly opposed to certain of these bills. However, members should have a chance to vote on them, instead of killing them in committee, which was the case last year."

"Battle of the Budget"

The "Battle of the Budget" last week turned out to be somewhat of a bust, although the Republicans held their Assembly Ways and Means Committee hearing on it, which hearing was widely attended. The Democratic-controlled Senate's hearing on the budget was a complete washout. In holding the hearing the GOP at least made good campaign pledges.

"Hasty Marriage" Bill

Miss Jane Todd, Westchester Republican, and one of the two women members of the Assembly, is scheduled to introduce in the Assembly this week a bill aimed at cutting down "hasty marriages" by making more stringent regulations attendant upon securing a marriage license, and providing for compulsory elapsed time between the issuance of a license to wed and the performance of the wedding ceremony. Miss Todd, who last week introduced a bill permitting a divorce decree to be obtained after desertion lasting for a period of three years, believes her projected measure will serve in some degree to call a halt to marriages materializing "as a result of cocktail parties, nocturnal joy rides and alcoholic over-effervescence."

Lehman Appoints Baker

Despite pleas of Assemblyman D. Mallory Stephens, (Rep) of Putnam County, to withhold appointment of a successor to the late County Clerk Edward S. Agor, who died January 28th last, pending the presentation of a petition signed by thousands of county residents asking that Mrs. Glenna Agor, widow of the former county official, be named, Governor Lehman last Thursday, appointed Percy L. Baker of Carmel, N. Y. to fill the unexpired term. Mr. Agor had served some seven terms as County Clerk at the time of his death and residents of the county were anxious to see his wife carry on in the work he had performed so well.

Young GOP Convention

Walter J. Mahoney, President of the Association of New York State Young Republican Clubs, has announced that the annual convention of the organization will be held on May 15 and 16 inclusive, in Jamestown, N. Y. Ernest J. Leete of Jamestown, it is made known, is General Chairman of the Convention Committee and John J. Brophy, of the same city, is Executive Secretary. Anthony R. Saeli, also of Jamestown, has been appointed publicity director of the convention, and the committee proper has begun the issuance of a news bulletin to record the activities of the Young Republican organization throughout the state.

Miss Couch May Again Run

Miss Natalie Couch, who led the Republican ticket in the state in 1934 as candidate for Representative-at-Large, has announced that she hopes to be a candidate for Congress again this year as the Representative of the 25th Congressional District, comprising Rockland and all of Westchester County except Yonkers. She added, however, that her entrance into the Congressional race would depend on whether or not Congressman Charles D. Millard would be a candidate to succeed himself. Her information was, she made known, that Representative Millard would like to run for Surrogate, to succeed George A. Slater, of Port Chester, who will reach the retirement age in one year. Although defeated by Mrs. Caroline O'Day in 1934, Miss Couch, as her admirers put it, "ran against Mr. and Mrs. Santa Clause and led the GOP ticket by some 100,000 votes". One of the best liked women in politics in the state, Miss Couch is sure to roll up a tremendous plurality if she does become a congressional candidate.

State Committee Meets Feb. 18

Col. Lafayette B. Gleason, Secretary of the Republican State Committee, has issued a call for a meeting of the committee to be held in the National Republican Club at 1 P. M. February 18 for the purpose of electing delegates-at-large and alternates to the National Republican Convention, to be held in Cleveland.

WEST CAMERON

Car Overturns

Three people narrowly escaped serious injury Sunday morning as a Dodge coupe, owned and operated by Charles Clinton of North Cameron, skidded on the icy road and overturned in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Spears. Mr. Clinton, in company with Almond Sherer and Orson Myers of Cameron was driving toward Hornell at the time of the accident. Two windows were broken out of the car but fortunately no one was cut by the flying glass. There was soon enough help on the scene so the car was righted and was driven away under its own power.

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Short of Painted Post spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Spears.

Mr. and Mrs. Ashley Hibbard and daughter Velma, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Spears and family and Richard and Catherine Giles attended a dance in Cameron Friday evening.

Half of Farmers Still in Mud

One-half of Farmers in State on Unimproved Roads, Audience Told.

About one-half of the farmers in New York State are still in the mud, says W. M. Curtiss of the department of agricultural economics at Cornell who spoke to a Farm and Home week audience here on the value of improved roads to farmers.

He says he knows just what farmers themselves think good roads are worth. From more than five thousand farmers he learned that they thought a gravel road would increase the value of their farms twenty per cent as compared with a dirt road. They estimated a hard road would increase the value fifty per cent over its value on a dirt road.

"Regardless of whether farmers lived on dirt, gravel or hard roads, or in densely populated or sparcely settled areas, their estimate of the value of a hard road on farms was virtually the same".

The increased use of motor vehicles has made improved roads increasingly important, Mr. Curtiss pointed out. Not only are production and marketing costs reduced because of improved roads, he explained, but the value of the farm as a home is increased.

"Farm-to-market roads connect the home with the school, the church, and the grange. These roads are also used by persons other than farmers as connecting links between main routes and small centers of population, and for leisurely travel".

COMMUNICATION

Feb. 7, 1936

Advertiser,
Addison, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

The Addison Advertiser in a recent statement says that "the people are not in a temper to want to read figures". So I write and say "Oh yes we do!" I eat them with my oatmeal and sauce, morning, noon and night. Just to show you. Here are figures which you think we don't like. THESE are FIGURES:

Several nations in the work already have real old age pensions which do not require the aged to make absolute paupers of themselves, before they apply, as done in the United States under the present laws. One of these—little Denmark provides the payment of $75 per month to all persons over 55 years of age.

(Figures from the "American Citizen" which has now joined the old age pension movement.)

So, you see, little Denmark finds this practicable. America, with all her vastly greater per capita wealth and resources, certainly can do as well, but Wall Street does not want us to, so the depression will last. They've got all the money — why should they want any change? If they did want it, it would be changed in twenty-four hours, depend upon it. They have America's money and have left the nation prostrate—the sole and only cause of the depression. There is as much raw material as ever, as many workers and jobs to be done but — no money to carry the work on. That is the sole truth of it all.

Here are some more figures, sent to show you that we just love them. We can get lots of them all different but all telling the same story.

Nearly twenty per cent of the families in the United States have incomes totaling less than one thousand dollars per year. How do they live? About forty-three per cent have incomes of less than fifteen hundred dollars—just barely enough for necessities! About eight per cent have incomes of five thousand dollars per year, while two and three one-hundredths have incomes in excess of ten thousand dollars and on into the millions!

Is that a just and equitable sharing of the national income? Is any man worth one thousand times as much as another? Our present system is not giving every man his worth—Ray Gailey in New York News.

But big money is holy—some people think. Their dupes from the banks to others in lucky positions whose money is guaranteed—these are opposing any change.

Which side are you on, the people or the grafters?

Emery H. Chase.

Potato Growers Meet In Annual Convention

Cohocton will be host to Steuben County potato growers in their ninth annual Convention which is to be scheduled to be held February 25, 26. The Auditorium of the Union High school has been engaged for this meeting, which offers a program of interesting discussion on many subjects related to the potato industry.

Marketing will be a feature of the program with several leading growers of New York State discussing the subject of what can be done to improve marketing conditions. Several guest speakers include Roy Porter of Elba, president of the Empire State Potato Club, E. A. Thornton, vice-president of Agriculture and Marketing at Albany, and Henry Marquart, president of the New York State Vegetable Growers Association and secretary of the Niagara Frontier Produce Market of Buffalo.

More than $100 worth of prizes will be awarded the winners in the potato show. Extensive exhibits will be presented by the Department of Agriculture and Markets and the Soil Conservation Service. Special entertainment is being arranged for each day's meeting by the Cohocton Exchange Club and dinner will be served each day by the Parents-Teachers Association.

Farm bureau officials predict a record attendance in the forthcoming meeting, and invite all Steuben County potato growers to exhibit at the show, and to participate in the convention.

Dairymen Study Breeding Program

No cow can produce beyond her inherent ability, stated Prof. C. G. Bradt, Cornell Animal Husbandryman, in his address at a series of meetings held by the farm bureau Thursday and Friday of last week.

The production ability of every cow is determined at birth by the inheritance that is bred into the calf by its parents, stated Mr. Bradt. For that reason a sound breeding program is essential in the development of a profitable herd, he said.

Mr. Bradt stressed the value of well bred sires as a means of herd development. By means of continuous records it is possible to compare daughters with their dams, and thus measure the breeding value of the herd sire. Bull associations are recommended as a means of keeping sires in service until their true worth is known.

Judging Contest Winners

In a production guessing contest of several selected cows in the dairy of Robert Dann of Painted Post Thursday morning, Clem Drake of Woodhull, placed first, R. R. Decker, Addison, second, E. E. Callahan of Corning, third, and William McCabe, Coopers, fourth. In a similar event, at the meeting with Harlo Atherton of Adrian Friday morning, Hugh Simpson of Jasper was first, Earl Brown and Albert Beardsley of Canisteo were second and third.

The contest demonstrated the fact that it is impossible to estimate the production of cows by physical appearance, and emphasized the point made by Mr. Bradt that continuous records are essential for a profitable dairy.

This series of meetings was a feature of the Better Sire Campaign, launched by the Farm Bureau in January, 1934, as a means of improving the dairy cattle of Steuben County. The next event on the program is the third annual Dairymen's Convention to be held at Jasper, March 12-13.

A & P Stores Featuring Greatest Food Sale in 77 Years of Merchandising This Week

Managers and Clerks Striving for Prizes in Big Contest —Three-Day Pleasure Trip to Gotham Will Reward Winning Managers—Company Buyers Conduct Diligent Search for Outstanding Values to Offer A & P Customers During Big Sale.

A special advertisement in this issue of the ADVERTISER announces special shopping values in groceries and food supplies which will be offered in the company's many stores during the present week. The event is being held in celebration of the company's seventy seventh year of successful business.

As a special feature of the anniversary sale, A&P managers and clerks in this vicinity are at present engaged in one of the most interesting sales events ever conducted by the A&P in over three quarters of a century of food merchandising, In addition to valuable cash prizes for clerks, winning managers will be awarded a three day trip to New York City which will include visits to popular places of interest as well as theatre parties sight seeing trips, etc. A great deal of interest is being revealed in the big event by the big A&P organization and its thousands of satisfied patrons.

Months of intensive preparation have preceded this sale. For sometime A&P buyers throughout the country; in fact, throughout the world, have been diligently searching the markets for outstanding values to offer A&P customers during this sale. Now with the merchandise all assembled on A&P's well stocked shelves, the sale is in ful swing. It is believed that this food sale will surpass anything ever attempted by the A&P organization whose policy since the founding of its first store 77 years ago, has been to offer its customers the finest foods obtainable at the lowest possible prices, consistent with current market conditions.

Started in 1859

The historical background of the A&P, possibly little known to many, is indeed an interesting one. The company's progress and development has been an inspiration to leaders in American history for over three-quarters of a century. It was in 1859 that Mr. George Huntington Hartford, founder of the A&P opened the first store of the chain on Vesey Street, in New York City. His policy of elimination of the many profits exsisting between the producer and consumer and offering foods at a small profit on rapid turnover, proved to be a popular one with food buyers. The Vesey Street store prospered and before long many new stores were opened in various parts of the territory. The public was quick to sense the values and savings offered by the popular red front A-&P stores and by the turn of the century, A&P was well on its way to being a national institution.

Over 15,000 Stores

At the time of the death of Mr. George Huntington Hartford in 1917 the operation of the business was taken over by his two sons, Messrs. John A. Hartford and George L. Hartford who had grown up in the business with their father. Under their leadership, the A&P organization has grown to over 15,000 stores operating in almost every state of the country, as well as in Canada, bringing about a realization of their father's dream of a chain of stores stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

A&P Food Stores consider the good will of its customers their greatest asset, second only to the fine type managers and clerks who have been attracted to the personnel of this great food organization . The officials of the company take great pride in the important part its managers and clerks play in their daily contacts with the millions of customers who enter the portals of A&P Food Stores —from the Atlantic to the Pacific —and from Maine to Texas each day.

A&P Always Abreast

The A&P Stores always keep abreast of the times. Their progress has kept step with the twentieth century with its automobiles, improvement in man's social condition, telephones, radios, fast trains—and good food at low cost.

The grocery store of two decades ago has been radically transformed from a sparsely filled cubby hole, dust laden and unattractively adorned, into a modern wonder.

Not many years ago it was considered a drudgery to go on a food shopping tour. But with the complete change in A&P methods of food display, shopping for food has become a pleasure.

Modernization is the keynote of A&P improvement policy , A constant search is made for new and better methods of making A&P stores attractive to their customers.

New types of display cases, equipped with modern mechanical refrigeration, bring before the customer a tempting array of fresh and cured meats and luncheon specialties. Other refrigeration cases of pleasing design contain fresh fish, many varieties being scaled and cleaned, ready for the pan.

The prime idea in the merchandising of food in A&P stores is to place it where it can be readily be seen by customers, and to sell it at the lowest possible prices—consistent with latest market conditions.

Courteous clerks who are well trained in the details regarding the stock on hand are ready to render prompt service to the housewife who enters the A&P store.

Clerks Always Posted

The complete value of service—service on the part of the A&P Organization to its managres and clerks—and in turn specialized service by these employes in their daily contacts with their customers —is constantly emphasized by A&P.

Every A&P employe is thoroughly trained in retail grocery salesman ship and must have a good knowledge of the products he sells before he is permitted to make any authoritative statements about them.

Daily sales letters issued from local A&P headquarters acquaint the store managers and clerks with new commodities, price changes, market conditions on fresh fruits and vegetable, items which are most seasonable, and in general sales ideas which are intended for the customer's benefit.

Many housewives rely upon their A&P food store managers for suggestions, and since the inauguration of the A&P free menu service several years ago, there has been a noticeable amount of additional requests for information that tends to make the task of pleasing the family palates much easier.

It is a special feature of A&P service to take care of the children.

A&P food store managers pride themselves on the fact that many of their best customers send their children to do their shopping secure in their knowledge they will receive the same prompt, courteous service that they themselves would receive.

Aims of Council

The aim of the Flood Control Council were stated in the report as follows:

Since the Council has acted as a central head in obtaining data, this same means should be continued by muncipalities, Chamber of Commerce, Farm Bureaus and other interested organizations.

Seek an appropriation from Congress to expend money for flood control upon such rivers and streams deemed advisable by that body.

Seek a state appropriation to be used for flood control upon such streams as not provided for by Congress.

Seek legislation creating a central State or Federal body for regulation of such flood control improvements by prohibiting obstructions other than authorized, regulating size of bridges and other structures by public authorities, railroads or public utility companies.

Leave details of proposed legislation to the respective legislative bodies.

The per capita cost of the flood damage in the county of Steuben was $100.05, according to County Attorney Drake at the Board meeting Monday. The largest single item was the sum of $2,790.00 in damage to residence property, according to the county attorney's estimate. The remainder of his tabulation follows:

Damage to industrial property, $1,684,000; damage to farm property, $1,244,000; damage to other utility property, $253,000; damage to state and Federal highways, $100,000; damage to county highways, $44,000; damage to town roads, $312,000; damage to other public property, $725,000.

A resolution was passed asking Congressman W. Sterling Cole to support Federal legislation providing flood control appropriations and requesting representatives in the state legislative bodies to favor flood control activities on streams not included in the Federal program.

Show Replica of Historic Fort

Albany—Historic Fort Ticonderoga on Lake Champlain, scene of one of the famous exploits of the Revolution, is now being displayed in miniature at the New York State Exhibit of the Bureau of State Publicity on the east Gallery of Grand Central Terminal, New York City. The model is a replica of the citadel captured from the British garrison by Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain Boys "in the name of Jehova and Continental Congress" by a surprise night attach May 9, 1775. It is one of the attractive features interesting the several thousand visitors who daily view the State Exhibit. Indications that the display is arousing new inerest in New York State's history are given by the many requests from visitors for plans of this masterpiece of miniature work.

The model was made at Fort Ticonderoga itself in the home of Milo S. King, manager of the fort, which is now a museum. The entire work was done by Mr. King and his staff. It accurately displays in minute detail the appearance of the fort in 1760 while held by the British after its capture from the French in 1759. There are 101 tiny superbly fashioned cannon dotting the parapets, while 125 sturdy little soldiers in colorful red uniforms give a realistic touch. The model was loaned to the exhibit by S. H. P. Pell, director of the Fort Ticonderoga Museum, through whose efforts Fort Ticonderoga has been restored as one of New York Stae's most noted historic sites.

Maple Syrup Producers Meet at Bath Feb. 20

Such things as the first robin are usually considered to be a sign of spring. The end of a long winter is forecast this year in a country-wide meeting of maple syrup producers to be held at Bath, February 20.

The program includes a discussion by J. A. Cope, Cornell Forester, on the care and management of the sugar bush. 'Sap to Syrup Without Settling' is the title of another discussion to be presented by Mr. Cope in a program which begins at ten o'clock and continues throughout the afternoon.

One of the purposes of this meeting, according to the Farm Bureau office, is to develop a more profitable market for maple syrup. Attractive labels and special containers have been designed by Mr. Cope and the Farm Bureau Federation markting committee, which indentify high grade New York syrup.

The meeting will be held at the farm bureau office and begins promptly at ten o'clock. A demonstration of the making of maple cream, soft sugar, and candies will be given to the ladies in the morning by the Home Bureau.

All maple syrup producers of the county and their wives are invited to attend.

WATCH FOWL POX

Fowl pox, a disease that varies in extent from year to year, seems to have struck one of the severest years, and poultrymen in New York state are warned to be on the lookout for it by the state college of veterinary medicine.

A given outbreak may or may not be severe, the college veterinarians say. In some flocks it may be so mild that the removal of a few affected birds will end it. A severe outbreak will result in heavy losses from lowered egg production and the death of birds. Scabs on the comb, wattles or face usually are first indications of pox in a flock, they point out. The eyes may also be involved, which may cause the trouble to be mistaken for roup.

The laboratory at the veterinary college has sent vaccine to more than 500 flocks around the state.

To Grow Potatoes 'Know Your Soil'

Degree of Sourness or Sweetness Important, Cornell Visitors Hear

Soil reaction, or the degree of sourness or sweetness of a soil, is highly important in successful potaeo production, Professor Ora Smith of the department of vegetable crops informed a Farm and Home Week audience at Cornell.

Results of four years' work, he said, with the Smooth Rural variety of potatoes grown on a silty loam show that total yields did not decrease in soils quite acid, as low as pH 4.68, but that yields did decrease when grown in alkaline soil, pH 7.5 or above.

More scabby tubers were noted in soils which were less and less acid up to about the neutural point. When grown in alkaline soil the percentage of scabby tubers again decreased, "a comparatively recent discovery and a very important one", Professor Smith said.

"Growers with acid soils, pH 4.8 to 5.4 ordinarily will grow a good clean crop of potatoes with relatively high yields without adding anything to change the soil. With soils more acid than pH 4.8 the addition of several hundred pounds of hydrated lime or ground limestone to the acre is advised to make certain that yields will not decrease.

"Soils between pH 5.5 and 6.5, which produce large amounts of scabby tubers, may need several hundred pounds of sulfur to the acre or commercial fertilizers that have acid. With soils that react higher than pH 6.5 or 7.0 and produce large quantities of scabby tubers, it does not appear practicable to add materials which lower the pH to where scab is not likely to be serious."

THE CHERRY CLIMAX COMES IN FEBRUARY

CHERRIES are eaten all year round in this country, including February, but the peak of their consumption probably comes in this famous month not only because it is the month of George Washington's birthday and we are reminded of the story of his truthfulness about the cherry tree, but because "red" is a pretty color to put in party foods for St. Valentine's Day and Lincoln's birthday. A National Cherry Week is held annually, from February fifteenth to February twenty-second, this year, at a time when housewives are interested, too, in putting some fruit into the diet to offset the effects of the necessarily heavier winter foods.

A Thrift Opportunity

With the current sales of canned cherries it is a good time for the thrifty housewife to stock up on a variety of them. There are two principal types of canned cherries—sweet and sour. There are both black and white sweet cherries. Sour cherries are red. The most abundant black sweet cherries are the Bing and Windsor, and the most famous white ones are the Royal Annes. Sour cherries are usually either Richmond or Montmorency. Sweet cherries are canned unpitted. Sour cherries are always canned with the pits removed.

This is a good season, too, to check up on your cherry recipes, and make sure they include some of the best ways of serving these fruits. The sweet cherries are delicious and decorative for use in salads, and the sour are grand for making cherry puddings and also for serving with meats when their tart flavor is needed.

Here are two new cherry recipes which you will be glad to add to your repertoire:

Baked Cherry Pudding: Cream together four tablespoons butter and one cup sugar, add three-fourths cup of milk alternately with the following sifted dry ingredients: one and one-half cups flour, two teaspoons of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoon salt. Pour into a buttered baking dish. Meanwhile boil together for five minutes the contents of one No. 2 can of pitted red cherries, one-half cup sugar and two teaspoons grated orange rind. Pour this on top of the batter, and bake for about thirty minutes in a medium oven—350 degrees. The dough will rise to the top, the cherries and syrup sink to the bottom forming a sort of sauce Turn out upside down and serve warm with plenty of cream. This serves eight persons.

Cherry Queen of Puddings: Pour two cups of hot milk over one cup of dry bread crumbs which are fairly fine. Add one half cup of sugar and two tablespoons butter. Let soak for five minutes. Then add the lightly beaten yolks of three eggs, and pour into a buttered pudding dish. Bake in a slow oven—275 to 300 degrees—for from forty to fifty minutes, or until a knife, inserted, comes out clean. Meanwhile cook the contents of one No. 2 can of pitted red cherries with three-fourths cup of sugar until the syrup is thick, then cool slightly. When the pudding is done, spread this cherry mixture on top, cover with a meringue made of three egg whites and six tablespoons of sugar. Return to the oven for about fifteen minutes or until the meringue is firm and a delicate brown. Serve cold. This serves eight persons.

Knights Are Crushed By Veteran Haverling Aggregation, 62-14— Knights Rally in Final Quarter

Team Work of Addison Five at Low Ebb, Permitting Veteran Bath Forwards to Out Maneuver Knights' Defense and Score at Will in Early Periods—Several Regulars Missing From Addison Line-up—Prospects Bright for Ensuing Years.

Coach Wendell Hewson led his badly depleted forces to Bath Saturday evening where the Haverling vets turned on the power and the Knights took their worst trouncing of the year, 62 to 14. In the preliminary, the Addison Seconds salvaged a measure of glory by conquering the opposition 11 to 10.

The evil fates which have hounded the Knights throughout the season fell upon the Addison man power previous to Saturday's fray and left gaping holes at many important points. Curtis Hults, probably the outstanding prospect from this year's aggregation, was compelled to withdraw from school last week, due to the recent illness of his father. Don Gillespie, who has been taking care of the center berth, was obliged to drop out for the rest of the season, owing to neuritis in his arm. To make matters worse as far as the Haverling contest was concerned, Tom Hopper was kept out by illness and Curtis Aldrich was unable to get away from his Saturday - night clerking duties.

As a consequence, the Addison coach was obliged to scramble his line-up when both the first and second teams took the floor. In the main game, Alio Triches and John Orr, starting at foward and guard on the varsity for the first time, were completely lost in the face of the fast-moving Haverling offen- opening stanza, they found themselves in the second half and were playing creditable varsity ball as the contest drew to a close. After Root was ejected on fouls in the third quarter, Orr was moved to center and did well, especially considering the size of his oponent.

No single player, however, was outstanding on the Addison team. All showed plenty of fight, particularly in the last quarter when they came back with a bound and squelched the scoring spree of the county seat aggregation. For Haverling, Gavagan rang up thirty points, said to be a league record for the season. Ebsary's total of twenty-five was also destructive to the Addison hopes. Morse also starred for Bath. The impressive total of the two Bath forwards was made possible by the weak team work of the Knights, as Gavagan and Ebsary camped under the Addison basket, making two men against the sole Addison guard. As a consequence they found it rather easy to circumvent the inexperienced Addison defense.

Despite the series of defeats which the Knights have suffered things look bright for the future seasons. Not a man on the Addison squad will be lost to the team for another year and most players have have four years, and the Frosh, incidentally, are rated one of the strongest assemblages of aspiring tossers to have entered the ranks of the Knights in the past ten years.

Academy Here Friday Night

Addison and vicinity basketball fans will have their big chance of the season for a peek at McMillen, Benye, Murphy and others of the county championship CFA five of Corning when the Academy team comes here Friday night to clash with the Addison Knights. The Blue and White aggregation has been bowling over all opposition during the season to date and their latests conquest was over the Elmira High School team several days ago by a one-sided score.

McMillen, the rangy center, has been making basketball history on the court during his days as a student at the hill institution and many critics rate him as one of the greatese pivet men to have donned a suit for the Steuben County tam. Followers of the sport will be anxious to see him in action, particularly as he seems destined to scale still greater heights if he chooses to continue his career in collegiate play.

The Knights are seriously handicapped by the loss of Hults and Gillespie, but they are intent on carrying the fight to teir renowned opponents. A close score will be interpreted as a moral victory for Hewson's inexperienced charges and a victory for the Addison five would be hailed as the outstanding upset of the season. With the tension of the early season now relieved, it is entirely possible that Root, Gardner, Dominic and others of the local alignment may shatter all predictions by coming through with the unexpected.

A preliminary game between the second teams of the two schools will precede the varsity game.

How, What and Why

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Anniversary Dinner

Mrs. A. G., writes: "I would like suggestions for a menu for a 50th or golden wedding anniversary dinner. It is to be served in the evening."

Professor Faith Fenton of the state college of home economics suggests fruit salad with quite a little orange, hot cheese biscuits, apricot ice cream, golden sponge cake or angel cake with orange icing.

Wiring Costs

S. F., writes: "Two wiremen have come to our place, and each has given figures on wiring our house and barns. The line is staked out and we have given rights-of-way. Whose figures should we accept?"

L. D. Kelsey, professor of extension service, answers: You are like hundreds of others who want a good job and yet realize that the lowest price is not always the wisest price.

"Since you cannot judge as to the required sizes of wire, switches and other equipment, it might be best to ask a power company representative to make a wire layout for your farm and buildings. He has blank forms especially for this purpose.

"After the wiring plan has been made and the wiring materials decided upon, the specifications are given to the contractors from whom bids are desired. In offering the contract, make sure that all contractors are bidding on the same plans and specifications; otherwise some of the less responsible men might plan to use materials of inferior quality or circuits of inadequate capacity, and thus would be able to underbid the others.

"Savings may be made by pooling with neighbors to obtain bids on several jobs at once. Contractors usually bid on individual wiring jobs and may be expected to offer a percentage discount if awarded contracts for all or a large part of the business on any one line or in any single area. The local power company or the county farm light and power committee has a list of approved wiring contractors."

Tarzan and Mate At Avon

The most ambitious attempt ever made by a motion picture studio to bring an adventure story to the screen has just been completed withe the filming of „Tarzan and His Mate," new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer thrill picture featuring Johnny Weismuller, to be shown at the Avon Theatre, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Efforts to surpass all previous jungle pictures made necessary the creation of a hundred acre area densely packed with trees and undergrowth in which African animals of all kinds were released.

Fifty Lions Used

Beasts that are shown in action include a herd of more than twenty elephants, more than fifty lions, a man-killing rhinoceros, chimpanzees, monkeys, Wunderbeeste, gazelles, hippopotami, boa-constrictors and hundreds of other specimens of rare jungle life.

Two of the biggest climaxes of the picture show a herd of maddened elephants charging a safari of natives and white men and later an attack of dozens of lions upon a camp. Wild animal men and a crew of 1,00 production men were recruited from all parts of the country to assist in the studio in obtaining the scenes.

The new story continues the adventures of Tarzan, played by Weismuller, when a safari of white men attempt to raid the "elephants' burial ground" of millions of dollars worth of ivory. Tarzan's attempts to protect the sacred jungle hoard get him into brethe thrills of "Tarzan the Ape Man."

Of special interest in the picture are scenes taken under water by a special process that hasa rencorded the strangest sight ever seen by human eye—a battle between a man and a giant crocodile.

The Players

The notable supporting cast includes many players remembered for their roles in "Tarzan, the ape Man," including Neil Hamilton, Forrester Harvey, Doris Lloyd, of the original cast, and Paul Cavanaugh, William Stack, Desmond Roberts, and Nathan Curry added.

Cedric Gibbons, long known for his work as art director and designer of unique sets, makes his debut as a director with the new film and is said to have incorporated many new ideas in his screen technique.
